Just north of Hohen-Sülzen lies the village Nieder-Flörsheim, where our vineyard location Frauenberg is located. The pure limestone. The exposed location and the elevated crest of the Frauenberg demand everything from the vines: On the one hand the heat of the southern orientation, on the other hand the constantly cool winds, which leave the grapes as if on the train.

Together with the mineral-rich but extremely barren soil, in which the vine has to root very deeply in order to get nutrients, the conditions for a long and healthy growing season are ideal. No wonder that the grapes from the Frauenberg are the most late-read of us every year.

The Riesling from the Frauenberg may be an immensely dense and compact wine, but unlike the Kirchenstück where the lush fruit reigns, the Frauenberg is a lean and very retracted wine. Fruity primary flavours are not his business.

With it, the stone dominates: Herbal spices, cool, tobacco-reminiscent aromas, cut acidity and a stabby mineral scaffold. In the mouth, the wine may have a lot of enamel, but it doesn't immediately reveal everything. The Frauenberg wants to be conquered. He needs time. He needs leisure. But then he rewards with an almost breathtaking elegance and subtlety, which plays PingPong in the motuh with the aromas: If one discovers the power, it is immediately caught up by the filigranity; One thinks that one has found the cool spiciness suddenly pushes the brilliant minerality to the fore. The Frauenberg is a wine that lives in the interstices. It is the interpretation of a stone wine.
